We recently had a devastating fire rip through our yard. We lost our entire office and all of our storage buildings. We are still going through what is left and determining what can be salvaged. We do not have any power, water, phone lines, internet on site, etc. We have been trying to stay positive and just keep pushing forward. We are still open, but it is a limited and it is going to take some time to sort through all of this. This may be the last update on the website for quite some time, but we had been contacting people through Facebook and email, until we have office phones again.

We got the office foundation revealed, and got out everything we could. Not a lot could be saved, but we had to see, if anything survived this horrible fire.

Our current command center is the old shop. The fire hit the backside of it and blew out the windows, but for the most part it is intact.

This is all that remains of the basement house that Larry lived in for many years and I grew up in. I have so many memories of this place and now it is just a few walls and a hole in the ground. It just breaks my heart to see all of this devastation. I am trying to stay positive and keep this legacy alive, but we have quite a long, hard road ahead of us.
